CHAPTER II
REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

This chapter includes the purpose of the literature review, a review of the literature on contract instructors from federal training agencies, academe, and other literature sources. The chapter highlights recurring themes and recommended practices that evolve from this literature review.

Purpose

The purpose of this literature review was to describe the relevant studies of the management of contract instructors in training organizations. Specifically, the review asked the question: what methods can be used to effectively support National Fire Academy (NFA) contract instructors' program delivery and their professional development? Preliminary research indicated that this material was relatively scarce. Consequently, this study included existing literature relative to the management of contract instructors in traditional academic institutions and other organizations. Since the literature review failed to locate any existing programs for the management of contract instructors in any civilian federal training agencies, this study further serves to strengthen the need for the development of such programs.

The terms "contract instructors", "part-time instructors", and "adjunct faculty" are used as synonyms throughout this document. However, there may be perceived differences in the meaning of the terms, with "adjunct faculty" being the preferred term used by contract instructors in academe (Rhodes, 1991). At the National Fire Academy "contract instructors" is the current preferred term. These personnel perform functions quite similar to those performed by adjunct faculty in academe.

The review of the literature included four parts. The first part involved describing literature from civilian and military federal training agencies to obtain any existing information about how they manage their contract instructors. The review also examined a basic assumption associated with the use of contract instructors: the alleged inherent cost saving of using contractors versus full-time government employees. The second part was a review of the
